Chapter 4 - "Falsely Accused"

* * * *

Terence and Mary both fall in a state of collapse after he carries her to safety, through the forest fire. Taggart's gang plant the money and carry the girl back to the ranch. When Terence regains consciousness, he seizes a horse and rides like the wind to the ranch.

As he is entering, he hears Mary denouncing Taggart who is making uncalled advances to her. Terence and Taggart knock each other down a few times when they are interrupted by Marshall. The latter dares to come over the border, flying with Bud Hughes the tramp aviator, despite the charge of murder which hangs over his head.

Taggart accuses Terence of stealing the money. Terence submits to a search and the money is immediately found. Marshall orders Terence off his ranch. Mary fears for Terence and with Bud and another loyal follower she rides after him.

Terence overtakes Taggart's gang, holds them up, and starts walking them towards the town. On the way, Taggart jumps him from behind. The men battle on the brink of a precipice.

Mary and her two aids arrive in time to see man after man fall off the brink, into the swirling waters below. To her horror, she sees Terence too flung over.
